1	“Smoking in Broadway” Article The New York Times June 9, 1853	 Smoking in Broadway. The absolute right of every man to breathe smoke instead of air, cannot be denied in all cases where the rights are confined to himself alone. If he chooses to say that the Almighty has not provided him with the proper element of respiration—has not compounded his atmosphere of the right materials—has made it too clear, transparent, invisible—has not mixed the gases in the true proportion—that he would have better consulted the interests and pleasure of his creature if he had run the new pipe of air through a vast tobacco vat and saturated it with this vegetable fume; why, perhaps there is no power vested in the Legislature to interfere with these convictions.
2	“Smoking in the Subway” Article The New York Times March 2, 1909	 SMOKING IN THE SUBWAY. Tobacco smoke should be banished from the platforms of the underground railway. In the impoverished air of the Subway the smoke is something worse than a nuisance. The practice of carrying extinguished cigars in the cars, indulged in by heedless or ill-bred men, should be stopped, too. The odor of one partly burned cigar, disagreeable anywhere, is positively nauseating.
3	“Tobacco Smoke” Article The New York Times July 8, 1911	 TOBACCO SMOKE. The incorporation under the laws of the State of the Non-Smokers' Protective League of America has been deferred, we believe, because some formalities have not yet been complied with. But the League will doubtless be incorporated in due time in this and other States, and it may serve a good purpose. No conscientious and law-abiding smoker ever wants to make himself objectionable to others. No.
