Subject: Career Fair here at Miami

Just got an e-mail from the school regarding the Fall Career Fair job and internship expo that's going to be on September 20. It's the largest career fair the school has and there will be around 175 companies...and Philip Morris USA will be one.

Considering there are so many companies there's bound to be more than one that wouldn't necessarily reflect positively on this or any University (Anheuser-Busch for instance), especially one lead by a former Health and Human Services secretary.

I doubt Shalala had anything to do with these companies that are attending, however a simple, kind message to her and the response would be interesting.

Whether it's better to start a discussion now or wait until the event to say anything (or both), or if it's even worth it is your call.

At this point I don't know anything more about the Career Expo than the participants, but it's probably the same routine as any other college career fair.
